

Andersson,

We acquired the attached information too late for the intended intercept. Hire whatever band of brigands, adventurers, and thugs as you can find at The Boar and Sabre. Get them out of the pub and on the road before noon. The society is prepared to offer double its usual rates to get this done. We expect both sides to be well armed, and the Kenzeys to already be in an ambush position around the handoff site.

The one chance we have is that Lyvvor's agents trust Kenzey's people even less than we do. Jes is running this operation for Lyvvor. Knowing Jes, she won't be rushed. She'll scout the site, and have her people ready to counter ambush from the hills. Then she'll walk in, calm and innocent, as soon as the moon is high. That gives your thugs a moment to catch up. If you actually hire someone clever this time, maybe to plan a surprise of their own.

The urgency of the situation cannot be stressed enough. The society must acquire The Blue Parcel.

We'll pay the usual bounties for anything else you recover, or you can split them with your agents as you see fit.

Anton,

Those terms will do. Send your men - no more than three - to that clearing by the west road shrine, the one they call the old druid's hall. My men will be waiting there with the thing. Show up with the payment we discussed, and you've got a deal.

Keep me waiting or try anything funny and you'll regret it. You're not the only one who wants this thing. You're just the one who bid the highest.

H. Kenzey
